At 12 o'clock sherp daturday night the saloens, lunch stands and ice depots and all branches of husiness usually open at that our, all closed pursuant to the notice served on them by Sheriff Jones, who gave them to derstand that the "state Sunday law" would be rigidly enforced. When the town clock tolled the hour of twelve every house closed, as it were, with a simultaneous bang of the doors, and within five minutes after gards it looked like it might be five o'clock in the morning, so dark and deserted sere the streets, nothing being heard save the tread of the policeman as they walked their bests, and that of the deputy riff; who were on the look out to see that law was complied with to the letter. fire closing, however, the saloons did thriving business. They were throng-1 with men who purchased bottles of something to on the morrow. The bottle trade by them was large, and they say that sold nearly twice as much whicks the bottle as they would otherwise have done by the drick, There was a good deal of drunkenness, for the imbiber took larger drinks and repeated oftener than he would have done under different circumstances for he was aware of the fact that he would have go without his beverage until Sunday

Sunday was a day that will long be rememthe citizens of Daliss. People bered by the cauzens of Daliss. People clamored at the ice depots for ice but the dealers refused to sell them and looking up went their way. The people begged for the frigid luxury but to no purpose, for the dealers were obdurate and would not listen to their entreaties. A woman with a cup of water in her hand, begged for a small piece of ice for her sick child but she could not get it, and she left weeping. Others who had sick ones at home importuned the dealers, but in vain, and then srose a strict denunciation of the strict enforcement of the Sunday law that was fearful. The 16.h legis-lature was exceriated. Those who were in any way put out were indignat and very expressive in their talk. The hotels run out of ice, the boarders did not like it, and neither did the landlords. The day was warm, and with no ice to cool one, it was very disagreeable, and so far as comfort in this respect was concerned, the people of Dallas would have fa ed as well curing that 24 hours on the staked plains. A party of young men ordered beer and ice from Fort Worth, and they were so rips for it that it did not last an hour. Husbands begged for ice, and swore that their wives were burning up with lever, but it did no good The Gruetli singing society went out a few miles from town, carrying plenty of both, and several other parties he i their own

The Frobsian society had taken the pre-caution to "fix" themselves, and at Meisterhan's pavilion there was free to the members and their friends, plenty of cool beer and lots of ice. The rigid enforcement of the law as a general thing is obnoxious to all classes, insamuch as it works great inconvenience. So far as the saloons are concerned, there was more drunkenness Saturday night and Sunday than there usually is. Saturday morning no mayor's court was held for want of material, but yesterday morning there was a large drunk crop up before his honor, Mayor Crowdus. The better class of people believe in a Sunday law, yet they are not in favor of extremes one way or the other, and the most effective complaint comes from a class who are rarely if ever seen within a saloon. There are other comforts that the law prohibits on this day, and it is this that creates such general dissat-

After 12 o'clock Saturday night a number of salconists went around in a body and among other places they visited the Herald and Gazette and took down the names of the editorial staff they found at work, and the number of compositors sticking type. They propose, they say, to have all branches of business arrested that work after 12 o'clock, in order to make the law as obnox-
